Understood Robert. I am not pleased with all that has happened with my sub, I agree there are issues and I am taking steps to rectify this. I do appreciate you recognizing at some point I had a reputation. I also hope you recognize not everything your reading is accurate.

I would like to discuss this door issue as a group. There are discrepancies in direction. I have personally been instructed depending on orientation of the unit to configure steps this way. This is based on safety because of how the applicant needs to walk out of the unit, available lighting, parking location etc.

It would be easier to explain in a meeting and get a definitive written directive.

Here is another one with issues that are easily corrected and should not have been made.

Kevin,

Please get your crews in line so that we are able to move forward with these issues with minimal issues. Today I am scrubbing my emails and I have seen at least 20 problems with your subs. Please drop the hammer on these guys because their performance does not look good on you and your reputation that you and your team has established.

We need for these crews to work more effectively and efficiently.
