We will know more tomorrow. Urban search and rescue started uncovering today, right before sunset, don't know if it's families, or an entire town that was trying to avoid flooding and got buried my land slide. Planning for the worst.

Are we using general purpose troops for the extraction of remains? We probably don't have time to get FSRT there for the first tranch, but we might want to order them up. If there's one mudslide, there's probably more. Right?

Does anyone have an estimate of what we're looking at? Did the mudslide take out a village? Or a minivan?

Sad news either way.
