

Congress of the United States

Washington, DC 20515

October 30, 2013

The Honorable John Kerry
Secretary
U.S. Department of State
Washington, D.C. 20520

Dear Mr. Secretary:

Congress continues to investigate the facts and circumstances surrounding the September 11, 2012, terrorist attack on the U.S. Special Mission Compound (SMC) in Benghazi, Libya, which claimed the lives of Ambassador J. Christopher Stevens and three other Americans. This includes an examination of whether the U.S. Government's response to the attack at the SMC was sufficient and timely. According to a recent report, there may have been an attempt to delay the deployment of resources to assist our diplomats. If accurate, this is a troubling development meriting a full explanation by this Administration.

On October 27, 2013, during an episode of CBS News' 60 Minutes, Lara Logan reported that CIA personnel responded to the attack on the SMC despite being ordered to wait. She stated:

About 30 minutes into the attack, a quick reaction force from the CIA Annex ignored orders to wait and raced to the compound, at times running and shooting their way through the streets just to get there.¹

Logan's report was not the first to raise questions about the difficulties that the Annex response team encountered when they moved to assist their colleagues in extremis.

In October 2012, news outlets reported that a team from the Annex was delayed in responding to the attack on the SMC because it was initially unable to obtain official authorization to do so.² At the time, Administration officials downplayed the 24-minute interval between the time the Annex learned of the attack and the response team's departure by arguing that the time was spent attempting to secure support from local militias.³ Notwithstanding the reason for the delay, it is highly probable that it was during this time that Ambassador Stevens and his colleague Sean Smith perished.
